HICKMAN TO BE SENTENCED TODAY; TO APPEAL CASE

Belief Is That the Case Will Be Considerably Prolonged

ATTORNEYS TO APPEAL

Argument of Unconstitutionality To Be the Strong Point

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 11 (I.N.S.)—The legal battle to save William Edward Hickman from the noose showed indications today of stretching out over a prolonged period of time, as guards prepared to escort the convicted kidnaper-killer of Marion Parker to Supreme Judge J. J. Trabucco's court where he will be arraigned for sentence.

It was regarded as virtually certain that Hickman's case will go to the California Supreme Court. If Judge Trabucco denies before attorneys' request for a new trial, an appeal will probably be taken to the higher tribunal based on the contention that the new statute under which Hickman was tried is unconstitutional.

The new law, which allowed Hickman to enter a plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity," places only the question of sanity in the hands of the jury, leaving the determination of the degree of guilt up to the judge. From his particular phase of the law, Hickman's attorneys are expected to mold their argument of unconstitutionality in the event that their request for a new trial is denied.

Jerome Walsh, chief defense counsel, and Richard Cantillon, his associate, prepared today to appear before Judge Trabucco at the time of arraignment for sentence and move for a new trial. It is probable that the judge will defer pronouncement of sentence until Tuesday to allow Walsh and Cantillon the opportunity of arguing their motion.

Although Judge Trabucco has given to positive forecast of the nature of the sentence which he intends to impose, it is believed that he will sentence Hickman to death on the gallows. He has said that he will give the defendant "all that the law allows."

Upon Judge Trabucco's determination of the degree of Hickman's guilt depends the question of whether life imprisonment or hanging will be the sentence.

The possibility that the judge may seek further evidence before passing sentence appeared in current reports that he plans to call Perry M. Parker, father of the murdered girl, and other witnesses before him.

Meanwhile, the convicted Kansas City youth maintained his quiescence in his cell in the county jail. As the moment of his appearance for sentence drew nearer he put to rest rumors that he would make a demonstration of speech after hearing Judge Trabucco's decision.

"I'm not going to do anything," he said, "and I'm not going to do anything when they put me on the gallows, either. I've got sense enough to go through with it. I went through everything else I've ever started."

Although Hickman faces another charge together with his former accomplice, Welby Hunt, 16, indications were that District Attorney Asa Keyes would not prosecute, but would rest on the "sane" verdict in the Marion Parker kidnapping-murder trial. Hickman and Hunt are jointly charged with the murder of C. Ivy Thoms, druggist, during a gun duel on Christmas eve, 1926.

Both Hickman and Hunt accuse each other of firing the bullet that killed Thoms.

IN BOXING BOOTS

Gordon Steele, son of Dr. John G. Steele, a sophomore at Pennsylvania University, is making quite a name for himself on the boxing team in the middle-weight class. Young Steele, who is really a welterweight, has been one of Coach Decker's mainstays on the team this season. In Charlottesville, Va., last week Gordon defeated Ray, of University of Virginia, in a hectic bout in the middleweight class. Pennsylvania lost the meet to the Virginians, 4 to 3, winning the light-weight, middle-weight and light heavy-weight bouts.

PASTOR'S WIFE ASSISTS BY "PINCH-HITTING"

Mrs. Francis J. S. Morrow During Past 11 Years Often Addressed Congregations

SHE ENJOYS THE WORK

"PINCH-HITTING" for her preacher husband has for the past eleven years furnished for Mrs. Francis J. S. Morrow, wife of the Rev. Morrow, a splendid outlet for her religious life and training as well as a means of enjoyment.

The Rev. Morrow, who is at present pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Churches at Tullytown and Emille, has from time to time found it necessary to have a pulp substitute, owing to illness. At such times the minister's wife has ably and cheerfully occupied the place of honor and service, giving to her listeners much that would be of benefit.

For the past several days Rev. Morrow has been ill at his Tullytown home, but the services at the two churches of which he has charge went on without an interruption. When she found her husband would not be able to deliver the message at Emille last Sunday morning, Mrs. Morrow outlined her talk on "The Kaleidoscope of Love," basing the sermon on Malachi 1:2, "I Have Loved You, Saith the Lord." Then again in the evening at the Tullytown church this most capable individual spoke about "Hope in God," giving to the congregation a splendid message based on Psalm 78 and Psalm 146.

"I do not get very nervous any more," she remarked in speaking of her work. "I really enjoy it, and when I find my assistance is needed I commence my preparation with much joy."

The talents of this resident of Tullytown are apparently numerous, for as well as being gifted as a public speaker, Mrs. Morrow also pleases from time to time with her soprano voice; and she is also an accomplished pianist.

"My first work in the line of platform speaking was at the normal school at East Stroudsburg, Pa.," she remarked today. "As president of the Young Women's Christian Association at the school I was frequently called upon to address the girls and to make remarks in public. This helped me much for the work in which I participate from time to time."

While her husband was located at Frackville, Pa., as pastor of a Methodist church in that town, he became ill, and was forced to stay indoors for one month. "At that time I also filled the pulpit, giving the usual number of sermons," Mrs. Morrow says. This pleasing speaker, which the two churches near Bristol are proud to refer to as the wife of their pastor, is of a most pleasing disposition. This slender preacher-housewife has light hair and blue eyes. She and her pastor-husband commenced their wedded life 17 years ago. They are blessed with four children: Francis H., 16, who is a senior at Bristol High School; Stewart, 12; and the twins, Ruth Nancy and Lorenz, 9.

Although the Rev. Morrow is improving steadily, Mrs. Morrow says she will be ready to enter the pulpit again tomorrow, if his condition does not permit him to speak. At the Emille Church in the morning and at Tullytown in the evening a demonstration will be given by the Tullytown Troop, No. 1, Boy Scouts of America, and large congregations are expected at each service. Those who attend will be assured of a fine sermon, for if the pastor does not address them his fair assistant will.

CONDUCT BANQUET

The membership committee of the Patriotic Order Sons of America inaugurated a new drive for members for 1928 with a get-together banquet held in the Blue Bell Restaurant last night. Paul Elliott, who secured the largest number of new members last year, was presented with a silk umbrella in appreciation by the other twelve members present.

A. LINCOLN, TELLER OF STORIES

There Was An Effectiveness About Lincoln's Tale-Telling That Marked Him As Distinguished In That Field

Following is taken from the February issue of the National Republic and was written by Henry Olney:

PRESIDENT Lincoln could accomplish more through the telling of a plain homely story than most men in public life have been able to do through lengthy conversations, wordy conferences, or the ap- pointing of investigating committees.

This was likewise true of things that he put in writing. He could, for instance, say more in one sentence on the back of a visiting card, and make his meaning clearer, than many officials can do in ten minutes' dictation to a stenographer.

He had the knack of turning down individuals or delegations by telling a story in such a way as to make them as pleased as though they had gotten what they wanted. And he could, by the same method, effectively rebuke, or put a quietus on those who impudently tried to take charge of his affairs and tell him how he ought to conduct the Presidency or the war.

He seemed always to have a story ready that would fit any and all occasions. His disposal of a case in the Navy Department where some functionary had noisily charged a prominent business man with having defrauded the government out of $2,200 is a sample of his brevity and justice. It reads: "Whereas—had transactions with the Navy Department to the amount of a million and a quarter dollars; and, whereas, he had the chance to steal a quarter of a million, and was only charged with stealing $2,200—and the question now is about his stealing a hundred—I don't believe he stole anything at all. Therefore, the record and findings are disapproved—declared null and void, and the defendants are fully discharged."

A loquacious preacher, of the political variety, called at the White House during the dark days of the Civil War and said he hoped "the Lord was on our side."

"I am not at all concerned about that," replied Lincoln, "for I know that the Lord is always on the side of the right. But it is my constant anxiety and prayer that I and this nation should be on the Lord's side."

One day an inquisitive visitor asked Lincoln how many men the Confederates had in the field.

"Twelve hundred thousand, according to the best authority," replied the President without smiling.

"Good gracious! As many as that?" exclaimed the questioner in frightened tones.

"Yes, sir, twelve hundred thousand—no doubt of it. You see, all of our generals, when they get whipped, say the enemy outnumber them from three or five to one, and I must believe them. We have four hundred thousand men in the field, and three times four makes twelve."

Presumably the questioner saw the point.

When asked what he thought of the bitter opposition to him of a certain New York editor, Lincoln said: "It reminds me of a traveler on horseback out on the frontier in the early days. A terrific thunder storm came up. He floundered along until his horse played out. The lightning afforded him the only clue to his way, but the peals of thunder were frightful. One furious bolt seemed to crash the earth beneath him. He immediately dropped to his knees and began to pray. His petition was short and decidedly to the point: 'Oh, Lord, if it is all the same to you give us a little more light and a little less noise.'"

Lincoln was never awed or excited by hearing from royalty or the presence of titled persons. An Austrian count, booted and spurred was introduced to the President by the Austrian minister who explained that the count desired to enter the American army. An introduction of this character was quite sufficient without any further recommendations. The count, however, felt that his importance had not been sufficiently emphasized, and reiterated that he was a count, and that his family were ancient and highly respectable. Lincoln smiled in a fatherly sort of way, and gently tapping the count on the shoulder, said: "Oh, that is all right young man. Never mind. You can be treated with just as much consideration for all of that."

When the Prince of Wales became engaged to Princess Alexandra, Queen Victoria sent a letter to President Lincoln through her American Minister, Lord Lyons, who happened to be a bachelor. Through the Secretary of State, an audience was arranged at the White House.

"May it please Your Excellency," said Lord Lyons, "I hold in my hand an autographed letter from my royal mistress, Queen Victoria, which I have been commanded to present to Your Excellency. In it she informs Your Excellency that her son, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, is about to contract a matrimonial alliance with Her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark."

After continuing this line of talk for a few minutes, Lyons, with impressive formality, tendered the letter to the President, and awaited his reply. The response was made in seven words:

"Lord Lyons, go thou and do likewise."

Never before nor since has a British ambassador been handled in such amusing and breezy fashion.

Voluminous reports by experts on various subjects always annoyed Lincoln. A committee appointed to report on a newly invented gun sent in a report of several hundred pages. Throwing it down in disgust, Lincoln said: "I should want a new lease of life to read this through. Why can't a committee of this kind occasionally exhibit a grain of common sense? If I send a man to buy a horse for me, I expect him to tell me his points—not how many hairs there are in his tail."

By writing three words on some papers Lincoln brought joy to a family, according to a New York congressman. (Continued on Page Four)

ANIMALS' PROTECTION WAS GREATLY NEEDED

Bucks County Society Has Made Numerous Investigations

GOOD RESULTS SEEN

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 11.—Evidence of the great need for the activities of the Bucks County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was presented yesterday at a meeting of the directors in the office of the president, Hiram H. Keller.

Officer Albert R. Atkinson, who is one of the society's representatives in this district, gave details concerning close to a dozen investigations made, including one where a farmer had moved away leaving live stock without care for several days. Cases of ill treatment of horses and dogs were also acted upon without the necessity for arrests.

"We would like to make it clear," said President Keller, "that persons who make complaints concerning alleged cruelty to animals should sign their names, as an evidence of good faith, but the names will be confidential. This is necessary. The society cannot act upon anonymous communications. Persons making complaints need not be involved in any prosecutions reported to any of our agents, but we must have their names, as I said, as evidence of their good faith."

The society is represented at the present time by officers in nearly every district in the county and expects to have others so that they can be conveniently reached, by telephone or otherwise, the directors explained.

Yesterday the society, which has recently been reorganized with Hiram (Continued on Page Four)

THREE MEN ARRESTED FOR THE HICKS ROBBERY

Much Excitement Caused At Newtown Over Arrest Of Three Men

3 CHAIRS RECOVERED

NEWTOWN, Feb. 11.—This borough is buzzing with excitement over the arrest of three men for the alleged theft of several very valuable pieces of antique furniture belonging to Miss Sarah Hicks, of this place, about two weeks ago. The furniture was valued at about $2500 and included three rare chairs and a dish-rail tilt-top table.

The men are John Weissman, Samuel Sunerson and Robert Guery, of Philadelphia, said to be dealers in antiques.

They appeared yesterday before Justice of the Peace Crossdale and are held for a further hearing Wednesday, Feb. 15 at 3 p. m. In default of $1500 bail they were committed to the Bucks County Prison.

The arrests were made by the state police on information charging them with burglary, larceny and receiving stolen goods, after an investigation which led detectives and others into New Jersey and Delaware in addition to Pennsylvania.

Two of the tables were found in Bordentown, N. J., and the Keith chairs, the most valuable of the lot, in Wilmington, Delaware. The table has not yet been recovered.

Sensational developments, it is said, are expected at the hearing next Wednesday, a time set as the investigators have not completed their work.

BRISTOL HIGH LOSES FIRST GAME AT HOME

Temple High Defeats Local Team by The Score of 27 to 19

GAME WAS VERY FAST

(By T. M. Juno)

Bristol High School tasted their first defeat on the home floor last night when Temple High took the local five into camp, 27 to 9.

The game was very fast and both teams boasted of a strong defense. Temple's man to man defense worked well, while Bristol's five man defense was exceptionally well.

Bogos, of the Cherry and White quintette, was the highest individual scorer of the evening, scoring a total of 18 points. Bogos was captain of Central High School last season. He holds the record of the East in being high scorer for a game, 35 points. In two games this season he has scored 64 points. Bogos with a very good eye seems to be able to get them in from any angle of the court.

Spadacchio opened the scoring by scoring a basket from within the fifteen yard line. Dunn scored first for the Diamond street boys by scoring on a long shot. Strumfels put in two unique shots for the locals and Wright scored a foul shot as the quarter ended, 7 to 2, in favor of the Cardinal and Gray squad.

Strumfels scored a free shot in the second quarter, which ended Bristol's scoring for the half. Bogos had now become familiar with the local court and caged three two-pointers and a gift shot. Smyth also scored, bringing the Cherry and White total to 11, while Bristol had 8.

Strumfels began the third quarter scoring by sinking a two-pointer. Bogos kept Temple ahead by hitting the cords for a pair of goals. Odyke added a point to Bristol's column while Spadacchio brought the Bristol total of the quarter to 13 by scoring a beautiful field goal. Bogos and Smyth scored for Temple, bringing their total to 19.

In the final quarter of the game Bogos scored three field goals, and Myers one to give Temple 27 points. Captain Odyke and De Risi scored for Bristol.

Bristol showed a fine fighting spirit. Temple had a fine cheering section.

LINCOLN STILL SERVES

Tomorrow Bristol along with the rest of the Nation will observe the anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

Every year it becomes apparent that Abraham Lincoln's services to his country and humanity are not limited to his life time. Though his spacious heart, his rational mind, his impressive face and figure no longer function as such, the memory of these things continues virile and inspiring to this generation as to those just ahead and others still to follow.

His greatest service comes when the spirit droops, the conscience becomes torpid, when the lust of materialism seizes the minds and hearts of the people and they turn from these great truths for which the Emancipator stood in such sublime dignity and firmness.

This like some of its immediately preceding years is one when the people may invoke with abundant profit to themselves the spirit of Lincoln, his self-effacement, his unbounded humanitarianism, his subordination of petty to large things, his high morality, his deep spirituality, his tremendous zeal for the good of all. No normal man or woman can stand in the shadow of Lincoln's memory and do little things.

Lincoln serves today no less mightily than during his life time. His example seems especially appropriate this year. In the rush to aggrandize self, to pile up substance, to give short shrift to spirit, to live only for the day, the memory of Lincoln comes to caution and restrain and to point the way to a path of service he followed so diligently.

SEED CATALOG TIME

Whether the seed catalog is a superstition or a bad habit is a much disputed question and worthy of the consideration of the Wednesday Night Debating Club, but that it is as inevitable in January as New Year's Day is indubitable.

Next to a certain mail order house catalog and before the almanac it is the most read of the family shelf of free literature. It might be suggested that it is also the most popular picture book on the sitting room table.

What visions of giant corn stalks, balloon size cabbage, over-populated potato hills, tender lettuce, dazlingly beautiful flowers and trim hedges are reared in the mind's eye of dad and mother when the new catalog from the seed company arrives. They pore through its leaves selecting the varieties they will plant in the backyard garden in the spring.

And the kids are not immune from this seed-mania. They fight for the new seed catalog and thumb through its pages in search of good things to eat and the plants and vegetables they will have in their gardens in the spring. With the seed catalogs the kiddies extend the planting, cultivating and harvesting over all 12 months of the year with the best results attained when the garden patches of the grown-up folks are lying idle.

You can tell about how a boy will turn out if you know what time he turns in.

Don Juan would have made a killing in this age of personal-experience magazines.

When feminine control is complete, doubtless the husband of a failure will take in washing.

SYNOPSIS

Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a divorce lawyer to whom she is engaged, discovers that her younger sister, Helene, has become infatuated with Huntley Sheldon, a wealthy Don Juan whose wife, Nita, is making a fourth attempt to divorce him. Myra disguises herself and goes to Sheldon's hunting lodge to frighten him into giving up Helene. Sheldon, recognizing Myra, pretends a heart attack, forcing her to remain with him all night. Nita arrives next morning, but Myra escapes without being identified. Then she finds that Helene has eloped with Ralph Naylor. Myra, believing herself safe from detection, has just received a warning visit from Sheldon.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued

Myra had some idea of what it might be that was worrying Helene—Huntley Sheldon. But she was thinking of it having only one element in it. She didn't want to mention the name until Helene did, and then she could explain only what she felt was necessary for the girl to know. She could not, however, realize what was passing through Helene's mind at that moment. But she was not at all surprised when Helene spoke.

"Myra, has Huntley Sheldon been here?" Helene watched Myra's face closely.

"Sheldon? Why, what ever made you think that?" Myra kept her head bent low over her work.

"I just wondered. I—I was a little worried about that—that evening. Why was Myra not telling the truth? Had something terrible happened, or what. Helene pondered.

"Now, you mustn't worry any more about that, Helene," Myra faced her sister, smiling. "It's all past and you have nothing to fear. You're just to be very happy now." Of course, that was it, Myra told herself. Helene didn't know anything about Sheldon's visit. She was merely worried about her own connections with the man and was afraid he might cause some trouble. If anything did happen now, it would be her worry—not Helene's.

"I'd like to speak to Mr. Sheldon please."

Helene crushed the cigarette stubs in her handkerchief. They were too real, too tangible, not to be considered as evidence. "All right, Myra. You've been a wonderful sister to me, and some day I'm going to show you how much I appreciate it. She got up and kissed Myra. "There, now the water's boiling. You'd better take it off."

But all that night Helene was troubled with the thoughts that ran persistently through her head. Why hadn't Myra told her the truth. Surely there must be some reason. Possibly Sheldon had got some hold over Myra through her. That was too awful even to think about. She reflected now on how silly she had been and what a true sister Myra was to her through it all. And now, suppose, by her own foolish actions she had got Myra into a mess of some kind.

And then again, what if Myra had really come under the spell of this man. She couldn't imagine her own clever, brilliant sister being so idiotic as to do anything of the sort. But stranger things have happened, she told herself. And she knew how fascinating Sheldon could be when he wanted to. And if that had happened—why, all those things that Myra had warned her about would fall on her sister's head. No, no, that couldn't happen. She wouldn't allow it. She felt as though she were in Myra's place, and Myra in hers.

If this were true, then something must be done, and quite logically, the task fell on Helene. She must find some plan whereby she could extricate Myra. She felt that she had grown up considerably since she had been married, and would be quite able to cope with any situation.

uation. Yes, clearly, this was what had happened.

She began to conceive a tremendous dislike to the man who had so nearly made a wreck of her life. Indeed, she was growing very dramatic over the entire affair. He should not be allowed to hurt Myra. She would take matters into her own hands—but how? That was the question. Perhaps she'd think of something by morning.

Pondering the question Helene slept fitfully, but by the time morning had arrived she was coming nearer to her solution. And when she finally awoke she had decided what she should do. She must see Huntley Sheldon and tell him just exactly what she thought of him. Tell him that he couldn't pull any of his tricks on her sister. That was all there was to do about it. Myra had taken care of her, and now she must protect Myra. She must make Sheldon realize that he must give Myra up.

Helene looked in through the bathroom door, where she could see Ralph shaving. That would keep him occupied for the next ten minutes, anyhow. She got out of bed and crept softly across the room and then went on to Myra's door to listen. She could hear her sister humming. Myra always hummed when she sat in front of her dressing table combing her hair. That would do away with the possibility of an interruption from Myra for some few minutes. The coast was clear.

On tip-toes Helene stole into the living room and sat down at the phone. She put in her call in a whispered voice. Then she waited. Suppose something had happened that would cause Sheldon not to see her. But no, she simply had to see him. That was all there was to it. When could he best get out of the house without being seen. That was easy. Myra and Ralph would both be at work, so she'd make it that very afternoon.

Now she heard the ringing at the other end of the wire. She must make Sheldon understand that this was very, very important, if he seemed to hesitate at all. Perhaps he had heard of her marriage, and would be afraid to be seen so soon with her. No, Sheldon wasn't that kind. He wasn't afraid of much of anything, when women were concerned. He'd probably come quickly enough when she called. Now she could hear the phone ring the second time. He was probably asleep, and it would awaken him.

Helene was quite right in her last thought, for Sheldon was making the most of his rest after a late party the night before. At the first ringing of the phone he stirred uneasily and decided to let it ring. Then came the second disturbing sound, and in self-defense he took the receiver off the hook and mumbled a very sleepy: "Hello." Then, as the answer came over the wire, his face brightened and he sat up in bed.

"Hello," Helene was murmuring sweetly into the phone. "I'd like to speak to Mr. Sheldon, please."

"This is Huntley, Helene."

"O, you recognized my voice. I didn't know whether you would or not." This dripping honey.

"I'd recognize it any place, darling," came the answer. "I'm so glad to hear from you again. I was sorry about Saturday night, but I suppose it couldn't be helped."

"And I was, too, but it was impossible for me to come." And what a good thing it was that I didn't go, Helene told herself. "But I'd love to see you soon."

"Why, that's fine," Sheldon felt quite pleased with himself. "When can you make it?"

"Well, would about two thirty this afternoon suit, Huntley?" Helene cooed.

"Splendid. At the apartment?"

"O, that would be fine." You don't know what you're letting yourself in for, Mr. Sheldon, Helene murmured to herself. Just wait until you see who's going to turn the tables.

GARDEN NOTES

In these days of scientific horticulture, every gardener hears a great deal about humus and its necessity. For practical purposes, it is the decayed vegetable material that makes "black dirt." Although scientists are still debating its real nature, all the gardener needs to know about it is that he needs it in his soil if he is to have a good garden and it becomes more difficult each year to get the standard prescription for supplying humus, decayed stable manure.

Decayed stable manure of good quality is the ideal material and should be used liberally wherever obtainable. The shredded cow manure of commerce is valuable for the purpose, having more body than the pulverized sheep manure which is of higher fertilizing value, but both are expensive to be used in the quantity needed for a humus supply. Stable manure, besides being a chief source of humus, is also a "complete" fertilizer, in that it contains the food supplies the plant needs in the way of phosphates, potash and nitrogen. Such stable manure as is now available, unfortunately is of poor quality.

Humus is of great mechanical importance in soil aside from the plant food it contains as it holds moisture in suspension and prevents the plants suffering from drought as they do in sandy soils where the moisture quickly seeps away. It also adds to the texture of the soil. Texture is the quality that makes the soil easy to work and makes it break apart readily and crumble when dry.

Farmers maintain a supply of humus by green manuring, that is, planting green crops and turning them under to decay. This is hardly practical in a small garden which would have to be sacrificed for an entire season, for a thorough green manuring. The main dependence now is upon composts of waste vegetable matter and stable manure, scientists have turned their attention to the production of synthetic humus producing compounds which are taking the place of the stable manures. By the use of chemical compounds, any gardener may have his humus heap at hand to build up his soil.

Larochelle Given Long Prison Term

Trenton police have received word to the effect that Stephen J. Larochelle, alias Lyons, arrested in Bristol last August for the New Bedford, Mass., authorities, had been sentenced to serve from 12 1/2 to 13 years in the Massachusetts State Prison. He was wanted there as an escaped convict and cracksmen. Three men said to have been implicated with Larochelle in safe robberies in New England were sentenced to serve 30 years each. They were tried in Washington, D. C.

After a robbery in a South Broad Street store police traced a car found in front of the place to Bristol. Detectives Donahoe and Briest came to Bristol to check up on Larochelle and Donahoe identified him as a man wanted in New Bedford. Lieutenant Lythgoe, of the Identification Bureau, took fingerprints of the prisoner and they tallied with those in possession of the New Bedford police.

Chief Walter declares that Larochelle forced the safe in the Metropolitan Store on South Broad Street on two occasions, looted those in the Liggett Drug Store and Fischer Shoe Store and also the cash register in the American Restaurant.

THE KINGDOM WITHIN US

There are moments in the life of a man when he feels completely the master of his destiny. When he straps the helm of the ship of life and embarks upon the stormy seas, the captain of his soul. Oft times such moments are rare, the voyage disastrous, and the mastery short lived.

The reason for failure is the man has not stopped to know himself, to search the inner recesses of his being, and to master his faculties. The knowledge one gains through a conscientious study of oneself leads to undreamed of realms of happiness and achievement. There is a kingdom within us which, except in beauty, the sublimest grandeur of the earth; which is nobler than the greatest deed of man, and which is more powerful than the strongest dynasty in history.

In this kingdom every man is his own ruler. Here, within the confines of his heart, man lives the supreme moments of his life, suffers his greatest sorrows, and wages his greatest battles. To king or potentate ruled with mightier hand, enacted more rigid laws, or enjoyed greater freedom of happiness, than man in the kingdom of his secret consciousness.

Here, at the close of day, or in times of greatest stress, one may retreat and find solace and peace. It is here that one finds every good and noble deed of man, every good and noble thought, and every shred of goodness and greatness. No stranger may enter in for there is no entrance to this kingdom of Self. This alone of all dynasties remains supreme through the ages, invaded not by friend or foe.

Which one leaves behind the sordid, cruel, pleasures of this superficial life and retreats to the peace and solitude of his thoughts, there comes to him the still, small voice, "Peace, be still." Here alone with all that is dear to him, all that is good and lovely, he finds spiritual uplift and comfort. Here his thoughts and expression in dreams, he lives, loves and moves, as a man apart, complete, supreme.

The despicable coward, no longer taunted by foes, becomes a man, a hero in a shiny armor, a leader of men, bold, dauntless, fearless. The financial wizard, mighty and fearful, becomes a boy again, free, happy, beloved. The crippled beggar, cowering upon the green fields, frolics with the children, and displays athletic prowess. The lonely, white haired grandmother lives again the days of her youth, holds to her breasts the first born, and smiles the smile of happiness upon her worried young husband.

The woman of the streets, scorned and ill, visions orange blossoms, the bridal gown, and the faint blush as her husband bestows his first kiss upon her trembling lips.

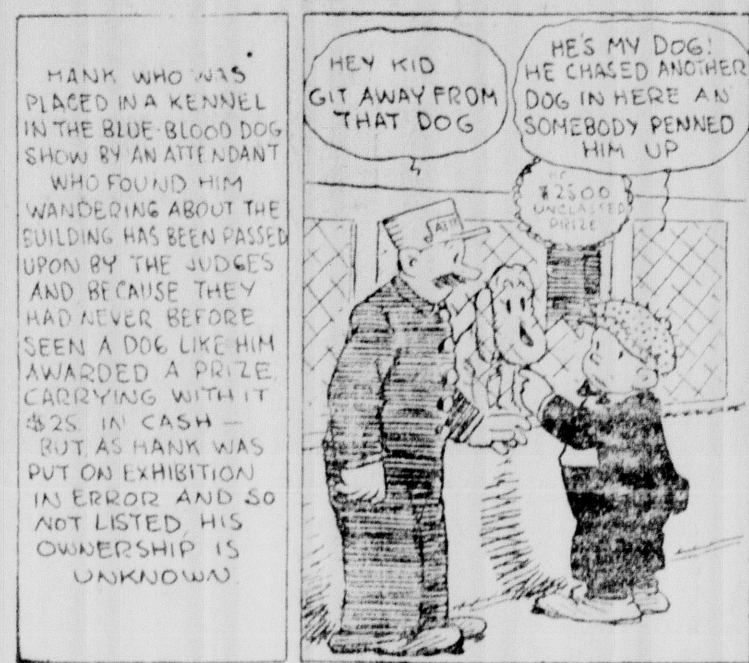

The joy, the unutterable joy of living in a world apart, a world untouched by the hands of man, not desecrated by the sins of earth; a world clean, pure, and holy. Here is a balm for every aching heart, a smile for every tear-stained face, a joy for every sorrowing soul.

Oh, to daily live, to do, to think, that our solitude may be sweet. To stave away within our kingdom every thought for good and evil. To cherish sweet memories, the songs of the birds, the blue of the sky; to fondle life's loveliest dreams; to dear, dear friends, that from you all that is impure, all that is bitter, retain only the best that seeking, you find it within you.

The kingdom within us is what we make it. It is the epitome of our life. Into it we put every good and noble deed, every lofty thought, every high ideal. Some there are who hide away therein the bitter drops of resentment, the spiteful hate and malice of men, and the burdens and heart-aches of time. Then when the dark cloud of night enshrouds them and the way grows dark, they stumble and fall. Their kingdom which was built upon the sands of time crumbles and sinks into ruins.

But the kingdom of Men, the kingdom of peace and assurance, decays not. The tides of time sweep on, the lights of life grow dim, but within our kingdom there is the music of rippling brooks, the songs of the birds, the blue of summer skies, and we pass on into sweet oblivion, the master of our soul, the captain of the helm of the ship of life.

man who related this interesting story: During the war a constituent came to me and stated that one of his sons was killed in a battle, and another died at Andersonville, while the third son was sick at Harper's Ferry. These disasters had such effect on his wife that she had become insane. He wanted to get this last and sick son discharged, and take him home, hoping it would restore his wife to reason. I went with him to President Lincoln and related the facts as well as I could, the father sitting by and weeping. The President, much affected, asked for the papers and wrote across them, "Discharge this man."

When the Secretary of War informed Lincoln of the Confederate raid at Fairfax, Va., in which a brigadier-general and a number of fine horses were captured, he gravely observed, "Well, I am sorry for the horses."

"Sorry for the horses, Mr. President!" exploded Secretary Stanton. "Yes," replied Lincoln, "I can make a brigadier-general in five minutes, but it is not easy to replace a hundred and ten horses."

When Lincoln was a member of the Illinois Legislature that body was frequently annoyed by a member from Wabash County who always found something unconstitutional in every bill that came up for consideration. He became a general nuisance. Finally, the other members called upon Lincoln to devise some method of shutting him up.

The next day a measure came up in which Lincoln's constituents were interested. It was his chance. The gentleman from Wabash arose and riddled the bill with constitutional objections.

Then Lincoln took the floor and told his story: "My Speaker, the attack of the member from Wabash on the constitutionality of this measure, reminds me of an old friend of mine. He's a peculiar looking old fellow, with shaggy, overhanging eyebrows, and a pair of spectacles under them. (Everybody turned to the member from Wabash, and recognized a personal description.) One morning just after the old man got up, he imagined on looking out of his door, that he saw a lively squirrel on a tree near his house. So he took down his rifle and fired at the squirrel, but the squirrel paid no attention to the shot. He loaded and fired again and again, until, at the thirteenth shot, he set down his gun impatiently, and said to his boy, who was looking on: 'Boy, there's something wrong with this rifle.' 'Rifle's all right, I know 'tis,' responded the boy, 'but where's your squirrel?'

"Don't you see him, humped up about half way up the tree?" inquired the old man, peering over his spectacles, and getting mystified.

"No, I don't," responded the boy, and then turning and looking into his father's face, he exclaimed, 'I see your squirrel! You've been firing at a house on your eyebrow!'

The story needed no explanation. The house was in an uproar of laughter. The member from Wabash was a dead duck from that time on.

Lincoln was always opposed to the use of strong drink. This phase of his personal character was distinctly brought out when a committee from the Chicago convention called upon him at his home in Springfield, Ill., and notified him of his nomination for President.

Following the ceremonies Lincoln remarked that as an appropriate conclusion to a conference so important and interesting, he supposed good manners would require that he should treat the committee with something to drink. Opening a door that led into a room in the rear, he called out "Mary! Mary!" A girl responded to the call. To her Mr. Lincoln spoke a few words in an undertone, and closing the door, returned again to converse with his guests. In a few minutes the maid entered, carrying a large waiter, containing several goblets and a large pitcher, and placed it upon the center-table.

Lincoln arose, and gravely said:

"Gentlemen, we must pledge our mutual healths in the most healthy beverage which God has given to man—it is the only beverage I have ever used or allowed in my family, and I cannot conscientiously depart from it on the present occasion—it is pure Adam's ale from the spring." Taking a goblet, he touched it to his lips, and pledged them his highest respects in a glass of cold water. Of course, all his guests were constrained to admire his consistency, and to join in his example.
